POWELL was a lad of about eight years when the settlement was established in Utah, in the year 1852, and here he grew to manhood under the conditions and influences that characterized the pioneer period in the history of the state. He was numbered among the successful representatives of agricultural and stock industry in the Salem district of Utah County, Carbon County, and was a sterling and honored citizen. His name is justly paid a tribute in this history. The data for this memoir to John A. Powell were supplied by his daughter, Mrs. Sarah J. Snow, of Salem.

John Powell was born in North Carolina, November 27, 1844. His father, John and Jemima Powell, who became converts to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and emigrated with their family to Utah in 1852, the closing of his life having been passed at Salem, Utah County, where he had gained pioneer honors and where John Powell was engaged in farming and stock raising.

John Powell received the advantages of the pioneer schools where he was reared to the sturdy discipline of the home. As a young man he engaged in the same line of work as an independent way, and he continued as one of the prominent exponents of agricultural and live stock industry in
